Professional Profile

Jennifer Wieland has extensive litigation experience, including Section 1983 claims, employment defense, and complex construction defect claims. Prior to attending law school, she spent two years as a legal assistant at Covington & Burling in Washington, D.C. After attending law school at the University of Virginia, she began her career as a law clerk for a federal district judge in Los Angeles. She then practiced in the general litigation department of Latham & Watkins in Costa Mesa, California.

After moving to Kansas City, Ms. Wieland practiced in the business and commercial litigation department of Blackwell Sanders with a primary focus on school districts, colleges and universities. Her experience involved contract disputes, federal telecommunications program compliance, employment and labor disputes, and constitutional issues. She has also presented to various groups on compliance and employment issues.
